

XM Satellite Radio has prevented me from searching for another, less-fullfilling job by making my hour-long commute more tolerable. Local content stations have failed to provide me with the services and content that I am looking for. By PAYING for XM radio, I don't think these local stations should be able to control what I can listen to and how I can get information over my car radio. Perhaps they should look to themselves and their offerings before trying to silence satellite radio and the millions of people who choose to PAY FOR their radio entertainment, news, talk, weather and sports.
